men to believe that they will give this practical preof of it at once. Meanwhile, nothing could be more irrelevant or more prejudicial to the best interests of the nation than any attempt to canvass the qualities of the old or of the new Chief of Staff. Both are men of great distinction and of approximately the same standing in the profession. They have sometimes preceded and cometimes followed one another in important military appointments. It is sheer non-sent to suggest that in selecting either of them for high Staff duites the Government are screening anything but a very natural choice. It is something worse than nomenes to preach the doctrine that this or that soldier has the prescriptive and permanent right to this or that soldier has the prescriptive and permanent right to this or that particular appointment, that there need be no change in organisation to meet the changing circumstances of war, that changes, whether of method or of personnel, are to be justified first by popular chamour. What would be the present situation if these views had actually prevailed throughout the war?

Frankly, continues The Times, the Govern-ment seem to us to have done their best to mishandle an overwhelming case. Whatever parently as the result of this meeting, and of a final and abortive attempt to persuade Sir William Robertson to accept either of the two positions at his disposal, that the official an mouncement of Sir Henry Wilson's transfer was issued late in the afternoon. It caused one managing that the first of the superied at this particular and Ripont. Small enterprises by our infantry and the surprised at this particular that members would not be surprised at this particular ending of the difficulty. The incident is bound to have a considerable reverberation at West minister, and it may even provoke an acute Parliamentary situation. Nothing definite can be said under that head until the Prime Minister has made his extatement, and Mr. Asquith has defined his attitude to the new position. It is obvious that the critics of the Cabinet cannot have any overs action until after the Prime Minister has apoken. Unrest in the Lobby last week, after the cheers and counce cheers of the opening day, led to a good deal of spoulation about a possible up to of censure. Mr. F. B. Bond has written a book which deserves serious consideration by all who are interested in psychical research.

He tells us graphically the story of the psychological experiment which resulted in the discovery of the Edgar Chapel at Glasthe discovery of the area, he records a won-
